LOCAL GOVERNMENT ELECTIONS POSTPONED

The NSW Government today announced a new date for the Local Government elections has been set for Saturday 4 December 2021.

Member for Vaucluse Gabrielle Upton said, “Although the Local Government elections were originally intended for 4 September 2021, the NSW Government has taken the step to postpone the election to ensure the safety and wellbeing of our communities, voters, polling staff and candidates.”

The NSW Government has worked with the Electoral Commission and NSW Health to implement a comprehensive plan to allow voters to cast their ballot safely in person, by post or online.

iVote (electronic voting) will also be available for the first time in the local council elections and the NSW Government has implemented changes to pre-poll to ensure that voters have 13 days to cast their ballot, reducing congestion on polling day.

Minister for Local Government Shelley Hancock said the decision, after extensive consultation with and advice from the NSW Electoral Commission and NSW Health, has been made in response to the COVID-19 situation.

“Due to the COVID-19 pandemic and current Public Health Orders impacting Greater Sydney, we have made the difficult decision to postpone the Local Government elections until later this year.”

The NSW Government has made available a total of $57 million for the elections in 2021, including $37 million to deliver them in a COVID safe way. In this election, 5.2 million voters will cast their ballots as around 5,000 candidates vie for 1,200 councillor positions across 125 local councils.

Nominations will open on Monday 25 October 2021 and close on Wednesday 3 November 2021.
